Potter: The Potters Cooperative

Biography

The Potters Cooperative (aka TPC) was started by a group of disgruntled potters who had been locked out of their potteries after trying to form a Pottery Workers Union. The facility operated from 1882 to 1925. The facility used was at the Dresden Works which accounts for the number of pieces marked with Dresden's backstamp. H. A. McNicol (see McNicol, Burton and D. E. McNicol) became President when the other potters returned to their original works.

Body Style Language Guide

An Illustrated Glossary of Terms

Body Parts List

FINIAL: The terminal ornament of any object but particularly on the cover of a vessel where it serves as a handle.

LID: The cover for a vessel.

RIM: The narrow area adjacent to the edge of a vessel.

NECK: The part of a vessel between the rim and the shoulder or body.

SHOULDER: The bulge just below the neck of a vessel.

HANDLE: That part of a vessel intended to be grasped with the hand.

TERMINAL: The end of a handle where it joins the body. Sometimes characterized by a sprig ornament taking the form of relief detail, often floral or foliate.

WAIST: The part of the vessel between the shoulder and foot, usually the part with the greatest diameter.

BASE: The foot or support for a vessel.

Special Definitions

RIBBING is defined as a relief ornamentation in the form of a series of parallel convex reeds. Example: Square-Ridged body styles.

FLUTING is a series of concave molded grooves of semi-circular, semi-elliptical, or rectangular sections. Example: Fishhook body style.

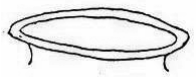

LOBES are projections of rounded form. Example: Panelled Grape body style.

EMBOSSMENT refers to any raised (relief) ornamentation. Example: Prairie Shape body style.

BULBOUS denotes a convex rounded form. Example: Niagara Fan (Shaw) body style.

FLARED denotes a concave rounded form. Example: Niagara Shape (Walley) body style.

Lid Shapes

CONICAL: Shaped like an inverted cone. Often found on round body styles.

DOMED: Semi-spherical in shape. Some are high such as found on the Ring ‘N Cable body style. Others are moderately high or low. The base of the lid may be circular, square, octagonal, etc.

PLATEAU: Found on some angular boy styles. The lower portion is curved or angles in a vertical rise. The top is flat.

PYRAMIDAL: Found on some angular body styles. Characterized by raised triangular sections which meet at the finial.

STEPPED: Circular or angular lids characterized by a stair-like progression of sections of decreasing size. May refer to any of the shapes listed above.

Handle Shapes

BRACKET: Angular handles resembling three sides of a rectangle. They are potted in flat or round simple styles as well as molded to resemble rope, twigs, or crabstock (gnarled branches). They are found on many square or octagonal body styles.

Modified bracket: Handles are angular in form but the lower and vertical sections are curved. The section attached to the vessel at the upper terminal may be perpendicular to it or sharply angled. Found on many later body styles.

B SHAPED: Handles resemble the capital letter “B” or its reverse. They are usually molded to resemble crabstock and have projecting knobs. Found primarily on Grape Octagon pitchers and teapots.

C SHAPED: Variously proportioned handles resembling the letter “C” or its reverse. At the lower terminal, the handle is often attached to the vessel vertically, thus eliminating the lower curve of the “C.” There are many forms and modifications. Some are plain, others are highly decorative. Those with spiral or convoluted decorations are known as C-Scroll handles. This handle is found on many of the ironstone pitcher and teapot body styles and also on some sugar bowls.

EARS: Protuberances which serve as handles. They are usually horizontal. Open-type or pierced ears are found in bracket, loop, or semi-circular shapes; plain or molded to resemble crabstock, intertwined branches, etc. Solid ears are often highly decorative and are found in forms such as shells, leaves, and volutes (spirals).

Ears are found on many early sugar bowls and most covered vegetable dishes, tureens, etc. They are called “big handles” in American references.

LOOP: Circular handles in which only part of the circle is represented. Some have a wide diameter, others are sharply angled or arched. Narrow flat loop handles are called strap handles.

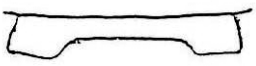

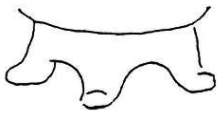

RING: Handles whose shape is a complete circle. They are usually simple in design and of utilitarian nature.

Base Shapes

BRACKET FEET: Foot-like extensions of the base at the corners of the vessel. Found most often on rectangular shapes with plain or recessed bases.

PEDESTAL: A raised platform which supports the body of the vessel.

PLAIN: Little or no distinction between the body of the vessel and its foot.

RECESSED: A distinctive receding or identifying of the body shape of the foot.

SHAPED: A distinctive flared platform-like structure at the foot of the vessel.
